

Intern and Clinical Teacher of the Year announced for 2015

On Tuesday 2 February, Charlies' medical staff gathered before the Grand Round to hear the presentations of the Intern and Clinical Teacher of the Year Awards for 2015.

The EF Haywood Prize acknowledges Dr Ted Haywood, a well-known physician and a great clinical teacher, and is awarded annually to the best clinical teacher of the year.

The winner of the EF Haywood Prize for 2015 was Professor Peter Friedland. Peter was recognised for his passion for his work. Many nominators commented that Peter was highly approachable to junior staff, an excellent teacher who lead by example and always made education of our future doctors a priority.

Professor Peter Friedland (left) with Dr Ted Haywood (centre) and Director Postgraduate Medical Education Dr Hadley Markus.

The EF Haywood Prize aims to encourage better clinical teaching by doctors in clinical situations and to reinforce clinical teaching as a valued professional activity. The emphasis is on teaching by clinicians in clinical settings, to help junior colleagues learn the art and science of medicine.

One nominator said that Peter's approach to medicine, family and a balanced life was hugely useful, adding: "His approach to the stresses of work, expectations, patients and seniors taught me more than any tutorial ever could."

Another said: "His bedside manner had a lasting impression on patients and taught me a lot about talking to patients."